

Since 2008, the international doctoral workshop New Perspectives on Late Modern European History yearly brings together PhD students and post-doctoral research fellows from the Université Libre de Bruxelles, the Humboldt University of Berlin and from the Universities of Oxford, Paris X – ENS Cachan and Geneva and, on two occasions, from the Central European University in Budapest and the University of Bologna. The aim of this workshop is to facilitate and encourage exchanges and collaborations between researchers in the initial, intermediate or final stage of their projects, to provide a place to discuss working hypothesis and to listen to inspirational presentations. The University of Geneva will have the pleasure to host the 2017 edition of this workshop on the 23 and 24 of June. During those two days, participants will be invited to present their research projects in panel discussions moderated by senior researchers from the collaborating universities. The workshop brings together proposals on contemporary and late modern history (19th – 21th century) without any thematic restrictions and will review emerging trends in ongoing researches.
